

I am writng in support of satellite radio and believe that this form of public communication should NOT have any restrictions placed upon it that are in any way more severe than other forms of public communication, such as TV and regular radio broadcasts. Since satellite signals can be received when other forms of communication are unavailable, a restriction of these broadcasts would clearly represent a threat to public safety. I seriously doubt that a restriction of satellite broadcasting that goes beyond the rules governing regular broadcasting could stand a serious Constitutional challenge. I would ask the FCC and members of Congress to prevent any restrirctions of satellite radio that do not apply to all other forms of public broadcasting. Thank you,
Larry M. Miller